North American Print Biennial
Acknowledgements

The Boston Printmakers thanks our distinguished juror Judith Brodie for selecting a beautiful, compelling exhibition. We are grateful to Lesley University Dean of the College of Art and Design Richard Zauf, Gallery Director Bonnell Robinson and Assistant Gallery Director Andrew Mroczek for hosting the 2017 North American Print Biennial at the Lunder Arts Center. We acknowledge each of their roles in this process, and fully appreciate their enthusiastic cooperation in creating this event.

We express our gratitude to all who contribute the Material Awards, along with the many patrons who purchase works for their collections. Your efforts realize the goals of the Biennial and the mission of our organization with your continuous support of printmaking and printmakers.

We acknowledge the 707 artists from across North America who provided 1980 submissions to this highly competitive exhibition. Your passion, energy and productiveness truly confirm the vitality and relevancy of printmaking today. You help us all to thrive.

I must also thank the Executive Board of The Boston Printmakers for their countless hours of hard work and dedication. As volunteers, you perpetuate and nurture our founding goals: to promote public knowledge, understanding, and support for printmaking. I also am grateful for Carolyn Muskat and Alex Gerasev, who organized this catalog and other printed matters, and for Nancy Diessner, who single-handedly coordinates The Boston Printmakers Student Exhibition. Your generosity does not go unnoticed.

The 2017 North American Print Biennial is dedicated to Vivian Berman (August 1928 – December 2016). As both a member of the Executive Board and a past President, her vision and influence provided critical support and direction for the organization for many years. She will be missed.

Outmoded?

“The second half of the twentieth century is no time to start writing on rocks,” proclaimed Robert Rauschenberg in the early 1960s. He was referring to stone-based lithography, a medium that struck him as outmoded in the Space Age. Despite his declaration, Rauschenberg went on to embrace the medium, producing one after another groundbreaking lithograph.

Artists working today might similarly contend that the dawn of the third millennium is no time to start chipping away at wood. Evidence, however, suggests otherwise. Nearly half of the works selected for the Boston Printmakers 2017 North American Print Biennial are relief prints—either woodcuts or linocuts—with additional techniques often part of the mix, as in Mark Sisson’s Portrait of Daniel King: Scouting, for Men and Boys, which combines linocut, woodcut, and lithography (p.34). It would be reasonable to argue that this high percentage is the result of a prejudice on my part as the juror. I had to ask this very question: Am I unduly partial to relief prints? Searching for an answer I turned to a 2016 exhibition, Three Centuries of American Prints from the National Gallery of Art, which I co-curated with Amy Johnston. If I had a bias, I thought, then it would reveal itself in the checklist at the back of the catalogue. What I learned was that of the 144 works listed, more than half were intaglio prints—either mezzotints, etchings, or engravings. Thirty-seven works, or precisely a quarter, were lithographs. As for woodcuts and linocuts, they numbered a scant ten, or 14 percent of the total. While the history of printmaking and the makeup of the National Gallery of Art’s collection had a determining role in the selection, the relatively small number of relief prints in the Three Centuries of American Prints exhibition would indicate that I am not overly partial to woodcuts and linocuts. For a more contemporary filter, I turned to a 2017 exhibition at the British Museum: The American Dream: pop to the present, featuring works from 1960 to 2013. Only 12 percent of the 195 works recorded in the catalogue are either woodcuts or linocuts, a figure that accords closely with the 14 percent figure for Three Centuries of American Prints. Yet 12 and 14 percent are far removed from the 50 percent figure for this biennial exhibition. I needed to probe further.

Perhaps, I thought, what was skewing the percentages in the case of the National Gallery and British Museum exhibitions was the fact that most of those artists are painters or sculptors who make prints, like Helen Frankenthaler or Donald Judd. Whereas—and admittedly this is an assumption—it is likely that most artists represented in the Boston biennial are printmakers, first and foremost.

Wanting to dig deeper into the question of percentages, I asked the organizers of the biennial for a breakdown of this year’s submissions. I learned that of the approximately 700 artists who competed for inclusion in this year’s biennial, about 220, 31 percent, had submitted woodcuts or linocuts (interestingly, a good number of the woodcuts reflecting Asian print traditions). Because relief prints (woodcuts and linocuts) represent only one category of printmaking—others being intaglio (etching, engraving, drypoint, mezzotint, etc.), lithography, screenprinting, monotype, and digital—the approximately 220 woodcuts and linocuts submitted constitute a big slice of the pie relative to these other categories. This alone may explain why of the 78 artists whose works were ultimately selected, almost 50 percent are represented in the exhibition by woodcuts or linocuts, or I may be partial to relief prints, or—and I place my bet here—the artist working in those techniques produced the more successful and compelling images. Whatever the case, the noteworthy fact is that we seem to be witnessing a rise in the number of artists making arresting woodcuts and linocuts today—a rise that might strike some as oddly anachronistic in the digital age, the way “writing on rocks” struck Rauschenberg as anachronistic in the sixties.
Is the apparent upsurge nothing more than a Luddite reaction to technological change? Or does it reflect an almost stubborn delight in returning to that which is outmoded? The artist Chuck Close has long shown an interest in antiquated genres and processes. He took up portrait painting in the late 1960s when, he says, “painting was dead, figurative painting was deader than a doornail, and portraiture was the most moribund of all activities.” When he made the improbably large mezzotint Keith in 1972, he took on a process that had experienced its heyday in the eighteenth century. Close’s interest in reviving an antiquated technique is not unlike that of the German artist Christiane Baumgartner, whose fourteen-foot long woodcut, Transall, is presently on view at the Museum of Fine Arts, Boston. That same interest is evident in many of the works featured in this biennial. In a touchscreen environment, there’s a lot to be said for the hands-on physicality of making a woodcut.

Next I queried some of the artists in the biennial, wanting to know why they had opted to make woodcuts or linocuts. Mark Sisson, whose work I mentioned earlier, questioned why anyone would “create portraits or use the onerous and often unforgiving traditional printmaking processes to make portraits in the digital millennium, when portraits of every kind are ubiquitous, thoughtlessly derivative, disposable and made by any pea brain with a cell phone who then makes them instantaneously available to all.” Sisson called his current work, “for better or worse . . . antiquated traditional portraiture,” and said that for him, spending countless hours working in an obsolete medium is “perversely satisfying.”

For Jean Gumpper, who has two woodcuts in the biennial (p. 21), the woodcut’s greatest appeal is the “physicality of carving and printing.” She even likened the experience to the physical movement of hiking, “with many steps along the way adding to the completed print.” Maria Doering, who is represented by the linocut Adventurous Soul (p. 18), gave up the taxing labor of carving in wood when she developed carpal tunnel syndrome. Undeterred, she turned to linocuts, saying that linoleum, when heated, “will carve like butter.” She wrote of carving for hours and letting her thoughts “weave in and out of the medium as [her] whole body engaged in the process of carving.” Raluca Iancu, whose prints combine woodcut, linocut, collage, and computer technology (p. 25), expressed the enjoyment “that comes from carving directly into the matrix.”

Charles Norris called the making of a woodcut such as Ghost Pile III (p. 30) a “zen-like experience,” adding (with credit to Marshall McLuhan) that “perhaps for some woodcut artists, the medium is also part of the message.” It seems that indeed that is the case and that the Boston Printmakers 2017 North American Print Biennial is sending a clear message: the touchscreen culture is leaving many artists hungering for labor-intensive, hands-on experiences.

How Prints Are Made

An original print is a work of graphic art; the general requirements are:
1. The artist has made the image in or upon the plate, stone, wood block, a computer, or other material for the purpose of creating a work of graphic art.
2. The impression is made directly from the original material by the artist or pursuant to his or her directions.
3. The finished print is approved by the artist.

Relief Printing

In relief printing, the artist carves away from a block or metal plate what is not to be printed. The raised surface is then inked and printed onto paper by means of hand pressure, rubbing the paper with a spoon or baren or by using a press. Both hand work and photo-based imagery can be used with this method.

Woodcut: Parts of a wood plank or plywood block are cut away, leaving a design in relief, which is then printed.

Wood Engraving: Similar to woodcut, but the end grain of the block is utilized, enabling the artist to get a much finer line.

Linocuts: Linoleum may be used instead of wood, giving a somewhat similar result.

Relief Etching: A print is made from an acid-etched plate whose top surface has been rolled up with ink and printed, rather than the usual intaglio inking method.

Intaglio Printing

Intaglio is the opposite of relief printing in that the incised lines or textured areas of the plate, and not the raised surface, hold the ink. After the artist has created the image on the plate (usually copper or zinc), ink is forced into the incised lines and textures. The surface is wiped clean, leaving ink only in the recessed lines or areas. The print is made when dampened paper is pressed into these areas, picking up the ink as it goes through the press. Both hand work and photo-based imagery can be used with this method.

Etching: A metal plate is coated with an acid resistant “ground”. The artist removes or scratches away parts of this ground to create the image. The plate is then put into an acid bath and the lines of the design are eaten into the plate. The resist can be a hard ground or a soft ground.

Aquatint: Large tonal areas of the plate are often created with aquatint. The plate is covered with a dusting of acid-resistant rosin or lightly sprayed with enamel. The amount deposited, along with the length of time the plate is etched, determines the final tone.
Engraving: No acid is used here. Instead, the lines are cut into the plate with a tool called a “burin”.

Drypoint: A method similar to engraving; however, a sharp needle is used which creates a burr along the cut line. Ink caught in that burr leaves the characteristically soft, velvety effect.

Mezzotint: A tool is used which raises a texture of burr over the entire plate. A print taken from this plate would be solid black. Lighter areas have to be scraped or burnished away.

Collagraph: The surface is built up by adhering various materials to the plate. Either (or both) relief and intaglio inking may be employed. When printed, the paper will generally be embossed due to the thickness of the materials on the plate.

Lithography

The image is drawn or painted onto a lithographic stone, metal or plastic plate using a greasy or non-water soluble material. The stone or plate is then treated so the image areas are ink-loving (greasy) and the non-image areas are water-loving. During printing, the stone or plate is dampened with water and an oil-based ink is rolled over the surface, depositing ink only on the image areas. Paper is placed on the inked surface and run through a press. Both hand work and photo-based imagery can be used with this method.

Screenprint

The artist prepares a stretched screen (originally silk but now usually polyester) and blocks out the areas not to be printed with glue, cut film, paper, photo-stencil, etc. Ink is then squeezed over the screen, forcing it through the open areas onto the paper, which has been placed beneath the screen. This method is also known as silkscreen and serigraphy. Both hand work and photo-based imagery can be used with this method.

Monotypes & Monoprints

Monotypes are unique prints made by creating an image on a smooth plate or open screen and then transferring the ink to paper, often using a press. The image is sometimes developed by overprinting repeatedly or by adding to the print surface directly.

Monoprints are also unique prints, but include at least one plate that has been treated in any one of the various printmaking techniques, creating a repeatable element. The artist often uses this plate as a base or constant and adds other imagery to create a unique print.
Digital Prints

Digital prints are first-generation prints made directly from a digital file. Digital images can be drawings and paintings done by hand using a paint program or collages of imagery from photographs, scanned materials, and other sources, which are manipulated in a photo-editing program, or a combination of the two methods. If other media are applied before or after printing, a mixed-media image results which can be either a multiple or a monoprint.

Digital collage: A single image is created by combining images from a variety of sources in a computer, where each layer of imagery can be manipulated separately and then combined for output in color or black ink. The computer may be used at any stage to produce printed images from which the artist selects parts to create a pasted collage.

Inkjet print: A continuous-tone image printed with an inkjet printer, which sprays color droplets from tiny nozzles onto a piece of paper or other substrate.

Iris print: An inkjet print printed on an Iris printer, which uses electrostatically sorted droplets of water-based vegetable dyes.

Giclée: A French term that means a spurt of ink and is sometimes used to describe a second-generation Iris print or reproduction.

Limited Editions

A set of identical prints made is called an edition. The edition number (represented as a fraction), title (if any), and signature of the artist usually appear at the bottom margin of each print. The top of the fraction identifies the print within the edition; the bottom of the fraction indicates the total number printed. A small number of additional prints designated as “Artist's Proof” or A.P. may also be printed.
